

The future of public high school education is here:

san francisco  flex academy

See what happens when the best of online education meets the best of traditional schooling.

Opening for Fall 2010, San Francisco Flex Academy (SF Flex) is a tuition-free public high school for the 21st century. SF Flex provides engaging and personalized learning that focuses on each student's full potential—an education that fits the individual student, not the masses. Students learn at their own pace in our school building, with support, one-on-one interaction, and classes with onsite California-credentialed teachers.

At SF Flex, it's our goal to make sure students of all backgrounds and aptitudes can thrive, both in high school and beyond.

Combining the latest innovations in online education with onsite classroom learning, SF Flex uses the K¹² program to provide a high school experience like no other. This year alone, 93% of the more than 1,000 graduates from K¹² schools will go on to college, including every one of the campuses of the University of California.

Make this the year you reach for your future. Take a closer look at SF Flex, and see how much further high school can take you.
